		2025 OUTLOOK: Cousins remains a trade candidate after a disappointing season in Atlanta. The veteran quarterback entered the 2024 season with high expectations after he had finished his prior six full seasons in the top 10 in pass TDs, as well as seven of his prior nine full seasons in the top 12 in fantasy points per game. Instead, he finished 30th in QBR, paced the NFL with 16 INTs and continued to add nothing with his legs (zero yards on 23 carries). Cousins managed three weekly finishes better than 15th prior to being benched for Michael Penix Jr. in Week 16. Perhaps Cousins will bounce back now that he's more than one year removed from Achilles surgery, but considering he's now 37 years old, it's unlikely he'll find his way back into the QB1 mix.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Allen was selected by the Jaguars in the seventh round of April's draft. His rushing efficiency at Syracuse is concerning (class-low 4.5 YPC), but he has the biggest hands in this RB class and his 83 targets and 64 receptions last season were tops in this RB class. He'll look to carve out a third-down role in the pros, but it may take a while, as Travis Etienne Jr., Tank Bigsby and fourth-round rookie Bhayshul Tuten top the Jacksonville depth chart.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Dissly is back for his eighth NFL season, including his second with the Chargers. Dissly somewhat quietly soaked up a solid 14.9% target share last season, but that wasn't enough to allow consistent fantasy production. His career-high 481 receiving yards ranked 22nd at the position and he remains a minimal producer in the touchdown department (his career high of four came way back in 2019). Dissly has yet to produce a top-20 fantasy campaign and is a good bet for a dip in targets with pass-catcher Tyler Conklin added to the Los Angeles tight end room. Dissly enters his age-29 campaign well off the fantasy radar.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Gray is entering his fifth season with the Chiefs, all of which have been as a backup to Travis Kelce. Gray's usage and production has increased during each of his pro seasons, which includes career-best marks in targets, catches, yards and touchdowns last season. Gray generated some hype when he scored four of his five touchdowns during a two-game stretch, but that proved fluky, as he averaged just 3.3 targets and 5.1 fantasy PPG the rest of the season. The 26-year-old is not worth your attention on draft day, but would be a worthwhile waiver add if 35-year-old Kelce were to miss time.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Helm was selected by the Titans in the fourth round of April's draft. His career 80% catch rate is best in this class (min. 25 targets), but he wasn't used a ton (99 targets and a 6% share in 55 games) in a good Texas offense. He underwhelmed at the combine, running a 4.84 40 at 241 pounds and posting a class-low 30-inch vertical. Helm will handle backup duties behind Chig Okonkwo, and is not a short-term fantasy option.

		2025 PROJECTIONS	35	24	235	9.9	1	0	0	0	53.58
		2025 OUTLOOK: Fannin was selected by Cleveland in the third round of April's draft. The 2024 Bowling Green offense ran through Fannin, as he handled a massive 39% of the targets and air yards. That allowed him a 117-1,555-10 receiving line on 155 targets, as well as a 3.83 YPRR. Every stat I've listed so far was the best among TEs in this class. He showed decent speed and athleticism at the combine, so along with his good hands, Fannin could emerge as a pass-catching threat in the pros. In the meantime, he'll battle for situational snaps behind starter David Njoku. Draft Fannin in dynasty leagues only.

		2025 PROJECTIONS	34	23	236	10.2	2	0	0	0	56.98
		2025 OUTLOOK: Gadsden was selected by the Chargers in the fifth round of April's draft. A converted receiver (the position his father played in the pros), Gadsden had two highly productive campaigns, having posted a 61-969-6 receiving line in 2022 and a 73-934-7 showing in 2024. He handled 20% of the Orange's targets during the 36 games he was active and his career 10.76 aDOT was the second highest in this TE class. He's more of a receiver than a blocker, which means perhaps there's some eventual fantasy appeal here, but he'll open his career buried behind Will Dissly and Tyler Conklin.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Knox is entering his seventh NFL season, including his third as Dalton Kincaid's running mate. The 2019 third-round pick flirted with top-12 fantasy output in the two years prior to Kincaid's arrival, but has since seen a severe dip in usage, plummeting to career-low marks in targets (33), touchdowns (one) and fantasy PPG (3.7) last season. That was despite Kincaid missing three games (Knox averaged 5.7 PPG those weeks). In total, Knox had zero double-digit fantasy outings in 2024 and his last game over 10.2 points was Week 16 of 2022. Even if Kincaid misses time, 28-year-old Knox won't be a starting option in fantasy.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Kmet enters 2025 having finished better than 16th in fantasy PPG once in his career, a ninth-place finish in 2023. He finished in the top 10 among TEs in all key categories that season, but plummeted to outside the top 20 in targets, catches, yards and fantasy points in 2024. In what was a bit of a bizarre season, Kmet appeared in all 17 games, paced all tight ends in snaps, finished fifth in routes and led the position with an 84% catch rate, but ended up 27th in fantasy PPG. He had two games with double-digit targets but three with zero. The 26-year-old's fantasy stock took a massive hit in April when Chicago spent its first-round pick on Colston Loveland. No longer positioned for more than the occasional target or two, Kmet is well off the fantasy radar.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Musgrave is entering his entering his third NFL as the clear No. 2 tight end in Green Bay. The 2023 second-round pick opened his career as the team's clear starter, but was passed by Tucker Kraft (a 2023 third rounder) when sidelined with an injury during his rookie season. Kraft locked down the starting job during the 2024 offseason and hasn't looked back. Musgrave missed 10 more games last season and was unproductive when active, playing 31% of the snaps and totaling 10 targets in seven outings. The 24-year-old will only be worth a speculative add if Kraft were to miss time in 2025.

		2025 PROJECTIONS	25	17	167	9.6	1	0	0	0	40.92
		2025 OUTLOOK: Conklin signed with the Chargers after spending the first seven years of his career with the Vikings and Jets. The veteran tight end has finished top 10 among tight ends in pass routes each of the last four seasons, though that hasn't allowed much fantasy production. He finished either exactly 16th or 18th in fantasy points all four years and was in the 18th-to-23rd range on a per-game basis each year. Conklin has proven reliable (he's missed two games in his career) but he's not targeted quite enough, nor does he score enough touchdowns (11 in seven seasons) to allow starter-level production in fantasy. Conklin may lead the Chargers' TE room in targets, but with Will Dissly also in the mix, he's no more than a fringe TE2.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Taylor is returning for his 15th NFL season, including his second straight as the primary backup for the Jets. Of course, after backing up Aaron Rodgers last season, Taylor will serve the same role behind newcomer Justin Fields in 2025. Taylor only attempted 22 passes last season and has averaged 68.7 attempts per season since 2018, maxing out with 180 in 2023. Taylor still adds a little bit of value with his legs and that helped him to three 17-plus fantasy point showings in four full games back in 2023. The 36-year-old is not worth your attention on draft day and, if called on to start, will be no more than a back-end QB2.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Rudolph is back with the Steelers following a one-year stint in Tennessee. Rudolph, who spent his first four seasons with Pittsburgh, played the bulk of the snaps in seven games for the Titans last season. He threw as many TDs (nine) as he did INTs (nine) and has still yet to clear 20.0 fantasy points in a single game in his pro career. Rudolph was not particularly effective and his 6.7 YPA and 64% completion percentage on 228 attempts last season exactly mirror his career rates. The 30-year-old will back up Aaron Rodgers this season and, even with DK Metcalf, Jonnu Smith and Pat Freiermuth at his disposal, won't be a fantasy option even if asked to make a few starts.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Minshew signed with the Chiefs and is expected to operate as Patrick Mahomes primary backup this season. This will be the journeyman's fifth team in seven seasons and he made multiple starts at each of his prior homes (Jacksonville, Philadelphia, Indianapolis and Las Vegas). Minshew has yet to play a full regular season and his best fantasy campaign was a 19th-place finish in 2019 (he was 13th on a per-game basis in 2020, but only appeared in nine games). Minshew played in 10 games with the Raiders last season, but threw more INTs (10) than touchdowns (nine) and eventually lost his starting job to Aidan O'Connell. Minshew is well off the fantasy radar and would only join the QB2 conversation if Mahomes were to miss time.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Winston signed with the Giants after spending his first 10 NFL seasons with the Buccaneers, Saints and Browns. He's primarily been a backup and spot-starter over the past five seasons, but he made seven straight starts in relief of injured Deshaun Watson last season. The result was what you expect from Winston, as he had his share of big plays (both good and bad) and ended up with 12 pass TDs and 12 INTs. Winston is likely to back up Russell Wilson and perhaps rookie Jaxon Dart this season. If called upon to start, he may add some big-play opportunities for the team's pass catchers, but will be no more than a desperation streaming option in deep leagues.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Pickett was traded to the Raiders (which came just months after a trade to the Browns) after spending his first three NFL seasons with the Steelers and Eagles. The 2022 first-round pick was serviceable in limited work in relief of Jalen Hurts last season, but struggled as the Steelers' starter during his first two years in the league (6.3 YPA, 13 pass TDs, 13 INTs). Pickett showed some rushing ability as a rookie (55-237-3), but followed with a 42-54-1 line in 2023. Pickett would need a Geno Smith injury in order to see the field, but even if called on to play, Pickett is a long shot to make a leap to fantasy relevance.

		2025 OUTLOOK: The ultimate risk/reward fantasy defense, the Cowboys were ravaged by injuries in 2024 (CBs DaRon Bland and Trevon Diggs and DEs DeMarcus Lawrence and Micah Parsons missed a combined 33 games), finished third in sacks and had four defensive touchdowns. They'll hope for more luck on the health front under new defensive coordinator Matt Eberflus, but it's tough to see a path back to the top of the fantasy leaderboard with so many NFC East and AFC West games on their schedule, beginning with a "no way" Week 1 matchup against the Eagles.

		2025 OUTLOOK: The Dolphins put forth a much better real-life season than fantasy defensively in 2024, finishing inside the top 10 in points and yards allowed, but 27th or worse in sacks, turnovers and defensive touchdowns. Other than the free-agent departure of Jevon Holland, which left them precariously thin at safety, the Dolphins return largely similar personnel. This is a matchups-oriented D/ST, and most of the good ones come in the season's first half (especially @IND, NE in Weeks 1 and 2).

		2025 OUTLOOK: The Titans allowed the second-fewest yards but fifth-most points last season, as frequent turnovers by their dreadful offense put their defense in constantly awful field position. On paper, the Titans don't have much worth celebrating, with DTs Jeffery Simmons and T'Vondre Sweat among the highlights, but they do have one of the league's softest D/ST schedules. If they look competent early, they could have many midseason matchups to exploit.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Few teams get as little defensive pressure as the Falcons, who have finished in the bottom 2 in sacks in three of the past four seasons. That was a catalyst to the team drafting Jalon Walker and James Pearce Jr., as well as signing Leonard Floyd, to bolster the defensive line. That'll help Jeff Ulbrich in his first season as defensive coordinator, but he has a lot of work to do before making this a fantasy-relevant unit. On a positive note, the Falcons do have a long stretch of favorable matchups in November.

		2025 OUTLOOK: As if the Browns needed anything more stacked against them, their defense draws one of the most brutal September schedules: CIN, @BAL, GB, @DET (plus MIN to begin October). Between that and LB Jeremiah Owusu-Koramoah's being out for the season, this is more of a wait-and-see unit than one to draft, despite its No. 3 finish in fantasy points in 2023. But there is talent here, including five-time All-Pro DE Myles Garrett and No. 5 overall draft pick DT Mason Graham.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Thanks in part to the additions of LBs Frankie Luvu and Bobby Wagner, the Commanders improved from fantasy's worst D/ST in 2023 to 23rd last season, a noticeable improvement but one still reflecting a large amount of room for growth. S Will Harris and DT Javon Kinlaw join the fray for 2025, a boost but unlikely enough to push this team into the upper tier at the position. 		2025 OUTLOOK: Under new defensive coordinator Brandon Staley (and new head coach Kellen Moore), the Saints will shift from a 4-3 to 3-4 base defense, presenting a challenge for an aging unit lacking in cornerback depth. Between DE Cameron Jordan, LB Demario Davis and S Tyrann Mathieu, there's enough here to make a matchups case when all are healthy, but the Saints are middling in terms of schedule favorability, with only four matchups against bottom-eight projected offenses.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Much of the Bengals' defensive prospects hinge upon their getting an extension done with All-Pro sack leader DE Trey Hendrickson. The team frequently engages in high-scoring affairs, making the D/ST susceptible to bad matchups, meaning lots of homework for fantasy managers. That said, new defensive coordinator Al Golden's unit does get a pair of dreamy assignments to begin 2025 (@CLE, JAX), so perhaps managers can capitalize on those before formulating an exit plan.

		2025 OUTLOOK:

The Raiders boast one of the league's better defensive fronts, led by four-time Pro Bowler DE Maxx Crosby, and likely to be bolstered should DT Christian Wilkins recover from the foot injury that ended his 2024 season in Week 5. Beyond that, there's little cause for excitement with this unit, which has a below-average D/ST schedule from a matchups perspective. Hey, at least we can say they begin 2025 hosting the Patriots.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Defensively speaking, the Panthers' 2024 was a flat-out disaster. They surrendered a record 534 points, became one of only five teams this century to allow 30-plus points and 400-plus yards per game, and were ravaged by multiple injuries to key defenders. Having a healthy DT Derrick Brown back will surely help, and the Panthers' first seven games don't include a single truly terrifying D/ST matchup. Still, this is a matchups-oriented defense at best.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Horton was selected by Seattle in the fifth round of April's draft. He busted out with 71-1,131-8 and 96-1,136-8 receiving lines in 2022 and 2023, respectively, before missing all but six games last season due to a knee injury. He has decent size, tested solid in Indy and posted good collegiate numbers in terms of raw totals (265-3,615-27 receiving) and efficiency (2.49 YPRR, 69% catch rate). He's battling for work as Seattle's No. 3 receiver.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Williams was selected by New England in the third round of April's draft. He is an undersized receiver (5-foot-10, 190 pounds) who soaked up a ton of work in college, totaling a 248-3,608-29 receiving line. When active, he handled 25% of the targets and 31% of the air yards during his five collegiate seasons. Drops were an issue, but he used his speed to produce well after the catch (6.4 RAC). There are a lot of bodies in the Patriots' WR room, but with Stefon Diggs (31 and recovering from a torn ACL), DeMario Douglas, Kayshon Boutte and Mack Hollins among the top competition, Williams easily could emerge as a starter if he proves to be the real deal. The 22-year-old is a late-round lottery ticket in deep leagues.

		2025 PROJECTIONS	29	19	224	11.9	1	0	0	0	47.67
		2025 OUTLOOK: Thornton was selected by the Raiders in the fourth round of April's draft. He is a vertical threat who ranked at or near the top of this WR class in YPR (25.4), YPT (18.9), aDOT (16.4) and RAC (10.7) last season, albeit in a situational role (35 targets, 9% share). In fact, Thornton was used sparingly throughout his four collegiate seasons, totaling a 6.1% target share (second lowest in this WR class) and 65-1,426-10 receiving line. He posted the best speed score (120) among WRs at the combine (4.30 40 at 6-foot-4, 205 pounds). Thornton is likely headed for a situational deep-threat role behind Jakobi Meyers and perhaps Amari Cooper (not to mention TE Brock Bowers), and he should be drafted only in deep or dynasty formats.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Bech was selected by Las Vegas in the second round of April's draft. He was used sparingly for much of his first three collegiate seasons prior to busting out with a 62-1,034-9 showing in 2024. He can align all over the formation and figures to do most of his damage in the short-to-intermediate range. With, at least, Jakobi Meyers and Brock Bowers ahead of him for targets, Bech is unlikely to make a short-term impact. The TCU product doesn't need to be drafted, but is a name to keep on your watch list.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Dike was selected by Tennessee in the fourth round of April's draft. He is a vertical target (12.7 aDOT) and return man whose collegiate receiving usage and efficiency was nothing spectacular, including a 1.74 YPRR and 56% catch rate. He can align all over the formation and showed well at the combine (4.34 40), but may be destined for backup WR and special teams work. He'll battle the likes of Van Jefferson and fellow fourth-round rookie Elic Ayomanor for snaps behind Calvin Ridley and Tyler Lockett this season. Dike is well off the short-term fantasy radar.
