		2025 OUTLOOK: Noel was selected by Houston in the third round of April's draft. He has a below-average frame with small hands and short arms, but that didn't stop him from showing well at the combine, where he tied for the highest vertical (41.5) and posted the longest broad jump (131). Primarily a short-range (8.0 aDOT) slot receiver (71%), Noel also worked as a kick and punt returner at Iowa State. Even with Tank Dell unlikely to play this season, Noel will need to battle Christian Kirk, Justin Watson and second-round rookie Jayden Higgins for work behind Nico Collins. He's a long shot for consistent rookie-season production, but is a fine dynasty stash.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Smith was selected by the Jets in the fourth round of April's draft. The Georgia product was limited to a class-low 5.5% of the targets during his 47 games with the Bulldogs. He dropped nine of his 76 targets last season, though his career 16.0 aDOT tops this class. Smith is a long shot for consistent fantasy value in the Jets' low-volume passing game, but he has a path to snaps with Allen Lazard and Josh Reynolds as his top competition behind Garrett Wilson.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Williams was selected by Green Bay in the third round of April's draft. He is the heaviest WR in this class (222 pounds), has big hands (10.3 inches) and plays mostly on the perimeter (82% of routes), but he's a short-range target, as shown by his 6.4 aDOT (second lowest in this WR class) and 10.2 YPR (lowest) last season. In addition to his 87 targets, Williams posted a 51-322-6 rushing line in 2024. He ran a strong 4.48 40 and has the potential to emerge as a multi-faceted (rusher, receiver, returner) asset in the pros. Williams' path to consistent targets in 2025 is tricky, as Romeo Doubs, Jayden Reed and fellow rookie Matthew Golden headline the depth chart. He's only worth a late-round flier, but is a good dynasty hold.

		2025 PROJECTIONS	13	7	94	13.7	1	0	0	0	20.55
		2025 OUTLOOK: Wicks is entering his third NFL season after catching exactly 39 passes during each of his first two years in Green Bay. He's generally been a depth receiver, but there were seven games last season in which he played at least 70% of the offensive snaps (Romeo Doubs and/or Christian Watson were sidelined those weeks). Wicks handled a healthy 22% target share (6.6 per game), but wasn't overly productive. After a strong 5-78-2 showing on 13 targets (24.8 fantasy points) in Week 4, he failed to clear seven targets, five receptions, 49 yards or 9.9 fantasy points in any of the other six outings. Even with Christian Watson likely to miss all or most of 2025, Wicks will have his hands full finding reps with Matthew Golden, Doubs, Jayden Reed and Savion Williams also on the roster. Wicks isn't worth drafting.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Johnson was selected by Tampa Bay in the seventh round of April's draft. He paced this WR class with an 81% catch rate last season at Oregon, though a class-low 5.9 aDOT was a big factor there. He was utilized as a short-range target throughout his collegiate career and ended up with a class-high 3,889 receiving yards in 62 games. His 2.89 YPRR during the span ranked second best in this WR class. Johnson's 4.51 40-yard dash (74 speed score) was a big red flag, as he's the tiniest WR in this class (5-foot-9, 154 pounds). Set to battle for a roster spot while competing in a very deep WR room, he'll look to lock down a role as a depth slot receiver (84% in college) and punt returner.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Felton was selected by Minnesota in the third round of April's draft. He is a thin, 183-pound receiver with a small wingspan but solid speed (4.37 40) and athletic ability (40-inch vert, 130-inch broad). He had a huge 2024 at Maryland (96-1,124-9 receiving line, 31% target share), but his efficiency was average, at best, both last season and for his career. He'll battle for a backup role behind Justin Jefferson, Jordan Addison and Adam Thielen and isn't on the 2025 fantasy radar.

		2025 OUTLOOK: Royals was selected by the Chiefs in the fourth round of April's draft. He has an average frame but moves well, as shown by a solid 4.42 40, which included a class-best 1.49 10-yard split. He's a perimeter receiver who primarily works in the short area and lived on hook routes at Utah State. Even in a good Chiefs offense, Royals is a long shot for 2025 fantasy value, as he'll be behind Xavier Worthy, Rashee Rice, Hollywood Brown and perhaps Tyquan Thornton and Juju Smith-Schuster on the depth chart. He's only worth drafting in dynasty.
