Schultz is eyeing a rebound in 2025 after he followed up four consecutive top-12 fantasy campaigns with a 20th-place finish (28th in PPG) in 2024. Schultz posted a productive 59-635-5 receiving line in 15 games in 2023 (his first season in Houston), but saw his usage dip last season despite ranking fourth among tight ends in pass routes. He became a nonfactor near the goal line, totaling wone ond zone targets and two TDs, both of which are his fewest since taking on a regular offensive role in 2020. His history suggests a return to the fringe-TE1 mix is possible, and he could see a slight boost in targets with Christian Kirk and a pair of rookies set to replace Stefon Diggs (free agency) and Tank Dell (knee), but he also could lose work to second-year TE Cade Stover. Schultz Goesn't have much late-round appeal.

Lloyd is entering his second NFL season after being limited to one game during his rookie season. The 2024 third-round pick produced 18 yards on seven touches while playing 10 snaps in Week 2. Ankle and hamstring injuries then knocked him out for a few months and appendicitis ended any chance of a return. The 24-year-old may be the future lead back in Green Bay, but he'll begin his second season on IR and will then battle for backup/change-of-pace duties behind feature back Josh Jacobs. The role is unlikely to lead to standalone value, but there's plenty of insurance appeal here in an offense that allowed Jacobs 337 touches (fifth most) last season. Lloyd is a fine add once healthy.

losivas is entering his third NFL season after working as a situational target during his first two campaigns. The 2023 sixth-round pick posted a 15-116-4 receiving line while playing 26% of the snaps as a rookie prior to leaping to a 78% snap share in 2024. Despite the generous playing time in the league's pass-heaviest offense, as well as several missed games by Tee Higgins, losivas cleared five targets only twice (Weeks 1 and 3) and averaged just 7.1

fantasy PPG. The 25-year-old finished last among 88 qualified wide receivers in YPRR (0.9) and, even if he fends off second-year Jermaine Burton for No. 3 duties, he'll be a minimal threat for consistent targets. Iosivas shouldn't be drafted.

Mostert's improbable career rolls on, as the 33-year-old signed with the Raiders during free agency. Undrafted back in 2015, Mostert was severely limited by injuries throughout most of his career, totaling 320 touches prior to reaching 200 in back-to-back seasons in Miami (2022-23). Mostert's career year came in 2023 when he scored a league-high 21 touchdowns, but he predictably crashed back to earth with two scores on 104 touches last season. Mostert cleared 12 touches and 11.8 fantasy points only once last season and heads to Las Vegas as a clear backup to rookie Ashton Jeanty. He's barely worth late-round consideration in deep leagues.

2025 OUTLOOK

In his first season as defensive coordinator, Jeff Hafley squeezed a lot from this unit, which finished third in the league in fantasy points (8.2 per game).

All-Pro S Xavier McKinney, LB Edgerrin Cooper and DE Rashan Gary return to comprise the heart of the Packers' defense, which, due to a lack of cornerback depth, should be susceptible to the matchups. The opening two weeks are ones to avoid (DET, WAS), but the season's middle chunks should provide fantasy managers opportunities.

	M Giants TE	2025 OUTLOOK:  Johnson is entering his second NFL season after playing a hefty 84% of the Giants' offensive snaps as a rookie. The fourth-round pick didn't see much work in the passing game early on and missed the final five games due to injury, but he was picking up steam prior to going down. After totaling a 14-150-0 receiving line on 20 targets (7% share) during his first eight games, Johnson leapt to a 15-181-1 line on 23 targets (19%) in the final four outings. The fantasy output wasn't great in the Giants' punchless offense, but the increase in reliance is notable and it will only help having Russell Wilson under center. The 24-year-old Johnson is a fine sleeper target in the late rounds.
